What Interested Me

- How I got interested in sport bikes was by the history of my Dad. He used to ride a Kawasaki 636 which was ahead of its time back in the late 2000's. He used to street race being given a popular nickname on the street since he wore all white gear matching his bike being only one of the few people in the county to have that. He would zoom pass people on the 198 highway going 155 mph from the stories he's told me. Me finding this out made me want to continue his path ever since he wrecked his bike unfortunately.

Why I'm Interested

- The main reason why I'm so intrigued in sport bikes is because of my dad. Me hearing the many stories of him riding has me hooked. The only thing that I wanted to do was ride ever since, wanting to experience it for myself. I learned that it's just not about going fast, but it's about improving your skills and truly learning the bike. Doing this helped me grow and become better at something exciting while also being safe.

What I Ride

- I currently ride a Kawasaki Z125 as my first beginner bike. This bike helps me learn the basics of handling and functions of one. The max speed I have gotten this bike to go is 70 mph making it street legal. The pure adrenaline rush and freedom you feel though is nothing I can compare it too. Even though it is a small bike, it's still one of the most fun things you can buy in my opinion. In the future, I plan to have a bigger bike like a Yamaha 6 or R1 because of their sleek design and power.

The Pre-Requirements

- The main things you need before getting into sport biking are a sense of responsibility and respect for the bike and the road. It's also important to have the right safety gear, like a helmet, gloves, and protective clothing. Being in good shape helps too because riding takes a lot of energy and strength, especially on long rides.
